

The Right to Request Flexible Working

What is Flexible Working?

There are many different forms of flexible working; it can describe the place you work or the kind of contract you are on.

Common kinds of flexible working include:

- Part-time working. For example, an employee might start work later and finish early in order to take care of children after school
- Flexi-time. Employees may be required to work within essential periods but outside 'core times' they often get flexibility in how they work their hours
- Job-sharing. Typically, two employees share the work normally done by one employee
- Working from home. New technology makes communication with office and customers possible by telephone, fax and email from home, car or other remote locations
- Term-time working. An employee on a permanent contract takes paid or unpaid leave during school holidays
- Staggered hours. Employees in the same workplace have different start, finish and break times – often as a way of covering longer opening hours
- Annual hours. This is a system which calculates the hours an employee works over a whole year. The annual hours are usually split into 'set shifts' and 'reserve shifts' which are worked as the demand dictates
- Compressed working hours. Employees work their total agreed hours over fewer working days – for example, a five-day working week is compressed into four days
- Shift-working. Shift-work is widespread in industries which must run on a 24-hour cycle, such as newspaper production, utilities and hospital and emergency services.

What is the law on flexible working?

In April 2003 the Employment Act introduced the right for parents of young and disabled children to apply to work flexibly. From April 2007 this right has been extended to cover carers of adults.

An application to work flexibly can cover:

- hours of work
- times of work
- place of work (as between home and place of business only)

and must be taken seriously by the employer.

Who can apply for flexible working?

The applicant making a request for flexible working must be an employee with a contract of employment – agency workers or members of the armed forces are not eligible. The employee must:

- have a child 16 and under (disabled child under 18)
- be the carer for an adult as defined by the Department for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform (BERR)
- have worked for their employer for 26 weeks continuously at the date that the application is made
- not have made another application to work flexibly under the right during the past 12 months.

Parents

To qualify the employee must have parental responsibility for the child. This includes biological parents, legal guardians, adoptive and foster parents and spouses of these, including same sex partners as long as they have parental responsibility for the child.

Employees can apply to work flexibly to look after a 'relative'. This definition covers parents, parent-in-law, adult child, adopted adult child, siblings (including those who are in-laws), uncles, aunts, grandparents or step-relatives.

Carers

The Work and Families Act defines a carer as an employee who is or expects to be caring for an adult who:

- is married to, or the partner or civil partner of the employee; or
- is a relative of the employee; or
- falls into neither category but lives at the same address as the employee.

How must the application be made?

The employee must comply with the following requirements:

- the application must be made in writing, stating that it is being made under the statutory right to apply for flexible working
- the application must confirm the employee's relationship to the child or adult
- the application must set out the employee's proposal and explain what effect the employee thinks this will have on the employer's business and how this may be dealt with
- the application must specify a start date for the proposed change giving the employer reasonable time to consider the proposal and implement it. This may take 12–14 weeks

- the application must state whether a previous application has been made and if so the date on which it was made
- the application must be dated.

Employees should be aware that if the employer approves their application, the variation in contractual terms is a permanent one and the employee has no automatic right to change back to their previous pattern of work, unless the application seeks the variation for a specified time period only. A trial period may be agreed.

How must the employer respond to the applicant?

In order to comply with the procedural requirements the employer must:

- arrange a meeting with the employee within 28 days of receiving the application to discuss the request. This meeting is not required if the employer agrees to the terms of the application and notifies the employee accordingly within 28 days of receiving the application
- allow the employee to be accompanied by a work colleague if they so wish
- notify the employee of their decision within 14 days of the date of the meeting. This notification will either:
  - accept the request and establish a start date and any other action or
  - confirm a compromise agreed at the meeting, or
  - reject the request and set out clear business reasons for the rejection together with notification of the appeals process
- arrange to hear the employee's appeal within 14 days of being informed of the employee's decision to appeal. The employee must be allowed to be accompanied by a work colleague if they so wish
- notify the employee of the decision on the appeal within 14 days after the date of the meeting. The notification will either:
  - uphold the appeal, specify the agreed variation and start date or
  - dismiss the appeal, state the grounds for the decision and contain a sufficient explanation of the refusal.

The employer and the employee can agree to extend any of these time limits.

The employer must record this agreement in writing, specifying the period to which the extension relates and the date on which the extension is to end.

A copy of this record must be sent to the employee.

On what grounds can applicants be refused?

Applications for flexible working arrangements can be refused only for the following reasons:

- the burden of additional costs
- detrimental effect on ability to meet customer demand
- inability to reorganise work among existing staff
- inability to recruit additional staff
- detrimental impact on quality
- detrimental impact on performance
- insufficiency of work during the periods the employee proposes to work
- planned structural changes.

What can an employee do if an employer refuses an application for flexible working?

Wherever possible it is better to reach agreement on flexible working within the workplace. There are a number of options open if the employer refuses the application at the appeal stage of the procedure including:

- informal discussions with the employer – there may be some simple misunderstanding of the procedure or facts which can be resolved by an informal route
- use of the employer's internal grievance procedure
- assistance from a third party such as a trade union representative or some other suitably experienced person
- ask Acas to help find a solution – by providing information or where appropriate through a process of conciliation.

Where agreement cannot be reached other options are:

- referral to the Acas Arbitration Scheme
- complaint to an employment tribunal.

Referral to the Acas Arbitration Scheme

If both parties agree the Acas Arbitration Scheme can be used to resolve the dispute. This scheme is designed to be a speedy, informal, confidential and non-legalistic alternative to an employment tribunal. An arbitrator hears the case and makes a decision which is binding on both parties. There is no right to go to an employment tribunal if the parties have opted to use this scheme instead. The remedies and compensation which an arbitrator can award are the same as those at an employment tribunal. The agreed reference to arbitration must be made within three months of the notification date of the employer's appeal decision or, in complaints about procedural breaches, three months from the date of the alleged breach.

Complaints to employment tribunals

Employees must present their complaint to an employment tribunal within three months of the date that the employer's decision is notified on appeal or in complaints relating to procedural breaches, three months from the date of the alleged breach. Complaints can be made to an employment tribunal on the following grounds:

- the employer's failure to comply with the statutory procedure
- the employer's use of an incorrect fact to explain why the application has been refused and which the employer failed to address at the appeal
- the employer's refusal to allow the employee to be accompanied.

Remedies and compensation

If a decision is made against an employer by an employment tribunal or an Acas arbitrator, the employer may be ordered to reconsider the employee's application for flexible working and may also be ordered to pay the employee compensation.

The actual amount of compensation will be determined by the tribunal or the Acas arbitrator on the basis of what is considered to be just and equitable given the circumstances of the case. The maximum level of compensation is eight weeks' pay subject to the statutory limit on a week's pay, which is reviewed annually (£350 from 1 February 2009).

If a complaint of refusal to allow the employee to be accompanied is upheld, the tribunal or arbitrator can award two weeks pay in compensation.

Dismissal and detriment

Employees are protected from suffering dismissal or detriment in the exercise of their right to apply to work flexibly. Complaints may be made to an employment tribunal if:

- the employee has suffered detriment as a result of exercising or seeking to exercise the right to apply to work flexibly
- the employee has been dismissed as a result of exercising or seeking to exercise the right to apply to work flexibly
- a person has suffered detriment or been dismissed as a result of accompanying or seeking to accompany an employee in the exercise of the right to apply to work flexibly.

Other employment rights for parents and carers include

Flexible Working	Parents of children 16 and under (disabled children under 18) and carers of adults have the right to apply to work flexibly and their employers have a duty to consider such requests seriously.
Annual Leave	Most workers – whether part-time or full-time – are entitled to 5.6 weeks’ paid annual leave. There is no statutory right to have bank holidays off as paid leave.
Parental Leave	Employees with at least one year’s service with their employer are entitled to 13 weeks’ unpaid parental leave for each child born or adopted up to the child’s fifth birthday. Employees with disabled children can take eighteen weeks unpaid leave up to the child’s eighteenth birthday.
Paternity Leave	One or two consecutive weeks’ leave.
Time off for dependants	All employees are entitled to reasonable time off without pay to deal with family emergencies.
Time off for antenatal care	All pregnant employees are allowed time off with pay to attend antenatal care appointments.

Other relevant legislation

If an employee considers that a disputed application to work flexibly also breaches other legislation, a complaint to an employment tribunal can include all alleged infringements. Employers should, therefore, be aware of other relevant legislation when determining an application for flexible working. This includes:

- Sex Discrimination Act 1975 – makes it unlawful for an employer to discriminate against an individual, either directly or indirectly, on the grounds of sex or marital status. In relation to employment it covers discrimination, victimisation and harassment on the grounds of gender, marriage, pregnancy, maternity leave and gender reassignment (transsexualism).
- Employment Equality (Age) Regulations 2006 – give protection against discrimination and harassment on the grounds of age. The regulations also introduce a national default retirement age of 65. Employees have the right to request to work beyond this age or any other retirement age set by their organisation.
- Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) Regulations 2003 – give protection against discrimination and harassment on the grounds of sexual orientation (orientation is defined as ‘same sex’ – lesbian/gay – ‘opposite sex’ – heterosexual – and ‘both sexes’ – bisexual).
- Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003 – give protection against discrimination and harassment on the grounds of religion or belief.

- Equal Pay Act 1970 – gives individuals the right to receive the same contractual pay and benefits as a person of the opposite sex in the same employment where the man and woman are performing like work, equivalent work or work of equal value.
- Race Relations Act 1976 – makes it unlawful to discriminate, either directly or indirectly, against an individual on grounds of race, colour, nationality (including citizenship) or ethnic or national origin. Individuals are protected from discrimination, victimisation and harassment.
- Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA) – makes it unlawful to discriminate on the grounds of disability and imposes a duty on employers to make reasonable adjustments to practices, policies, procedures and premises to ensure that the disabled person is not at a substantial disadvantage. Individuals are protected from discrimination and victimisation in recruitment, terms and conditions of employment, training, promotion, transfer and dismissal.
- Part-Time Workers (Prevention of Less Favourable Treatment) Regulations 2000 - Part-time workers cannot be treated less favourably in their contractual terms and conditions than comparable full-time workers.
- Fixed-term Employees (Prevention of Less Favourable Treatment) Regulations 2002 – since 1 October 2002, employees on fixed-term contracts have had the right to be paid the same rate as similar permanent employees working for the same employer and in general terms should not be treated less favourably than comparable permanent employees.