MAKING MATERNITY SERVICES SAFER: NURTURING A POSITIVE CULTURE
The role of a positive culture

Organisational culture has been identified as a key factor in recent investigations and reports on maternity safety. There is a growing body of evidence clearly linking culture with safety.

Culture can be described as ‘the way we do things around here’. Culture in health services is shaped by a number of factors:

- The expressed values of an organisation
- The early experience of joiners to the organisation
- The behaviours of leaders (adapted from King’s Fund, current website)

The Kings Fund have identified that staff have three core needs which must be addressed for them to thrive and flourish, which will in turn improve patients’ care and experience. (Figure 1)

Autonomy

The need to have control over one’s work life, and to be able to act consistently with one’s values

- Authority, empowerment and influence
  Influence over decisions about how care is structured and delivered, ways of working and organisational culture
- Justice and fairness
  Equity, psychological safety, positive diversity and universal inclusion
- Work conditions and working schedules
  Resources, time and a sense of the right and necessity to properly rest, and to work safely, flexibly and effectively.

Belonging

The need to be connected to, cared for by, and caring of colleagues, and to feel valued, respected and supported

- Teamworking
  Effectively functioning teams with role clarity and shared objectives, one of which is team member wellbeing
- Culture and leadership
  Nurturing cultures and compassionate leadership enabling high-quality, continually improving and compassionate care and staff support.

Contribution

The need to experience effectiveness in work and deliver valued outcomes

- Workload
  Work demand levels that enable that enable the sustainable leadership and delivery of safe, compassionate care
- Management and supervision
  The support, professional reflection, mentorship and supervision to enable staff to thrive in their work
- Education, learning and development
  Flexible, high-quality development opportunities that promote continuing growth and development for all.

How do we improve our culture?

In order to provide compassionate, safe, effective person-centred care in this increasingly complex environment and maintain resilience, staff need to care for each other as well as have self-care. There is growing evidence on how staff who feel supported, valued and developed can deliver better quality care with lower mortality rates, morbidity, and improved patient experience (Simpson et al. 2019).

Below are some examples of practical tools and exercises you can use in your organisation to ensure those core needs are met.

How do we measure our culture?

The first step in improving culture has to be a deep understanding and assessment of the current organisational culture. This will help to determine the best course of action and tools needed – one that is tailored to the local context, including staff and organisational processes.

The 20xx publication ‘Results of the RCM Health, Safety and Wellbeing Survey of Midwives, Maternity Support Workers and Student Midwives’ describes the findings of our survey of RCM members about their health, safety and wellbeing at work.

The latest NHS healthcare staff surveys, can provide essential information to employers and leaders about staff experience across the NHS in the United Kingdom:

NHS Scotland | Staff Survey 2020
NHS Northern Ireland | Staff Survey 2019

There is no identified ‘gold standard’ way of measuring culture across the NHS (Simpson et al. 2019) but there are many tools which can be useful to assess your organisational culture. We have listed the top five most utilised tools below:

(Simpson et al. 2019)

It may take several years before a profound culture change takes place but starting with an assessment and ensuring the findings are shared with the workforce is a good starting point. Focussing on specific aspects such as leadership, competence, procedures, or teamwork can help to inform the process in a step-by-step approach.
